Kim Soyoung: Unwoven Light

Thousands of hand-dyed, cut, and rolled sheets of Korean mulberry paper form Kim's colorful, three-dimensional works of art. She developed this nearly sculptural way of creating artworks using layers of paper, which she calls "seeds," to make the surface and sense of her images change from morning to night. Depending on the angle, distance and light, her pieces transform in a constantly shifting wave of texture, dimensions, depth, and color.

Soyoung Park: Suspended Light

Korean artist Park is best known for using everyday building materials to create large, experiential installations that rely on repetition and the interplay of light. At the Denno, she will recreate a version of her installation Unwoven Light. Suspended as a sculptural composition of chain-link fencing and iridescent Plexiglas formed in organic shapes, it will transform the gallery into a shimmering world of light, shadow, and brilliant color.
